BUILDING ENVELOPE UPGRADE

rebates for insulation, window and door, and air sealing upgrades

Insulation Information

Upgrades to your buildings envelope such as air sealing, insulation and windows and doors can yield big savings on heating costs while increasing comfort levels in your home.

Air sealing is one of the most cost effective ways to reduce heat loss and increase savings. Many homes have enough cracks and openings to equal an open window when added together. Common areas of air leakage include attics, basements and electrical/plumbing penetrations. Improving air tightness decreases heat loss, chilly drafts and moisture/pollen/dust infiltration making your home more comfortable and healthy.

Insulation comes in many different materials and forms and works by reducing heat loss through conduction. The measure of how effective insulation is at reducing heat loss is called its R-value (or RSI value in metric). The higher the number the more effective the product is at limiting heat loss. Insulation types include batt, board, loose fill and spray foam and insulation materials include fiberglass, polystyrene, cellulose and polyurethane and more. Some have higher R-value ratings per inch of thickness than others, and some are better suited to certain applications. While there is no one best insulation you can contact Efficiency PEI for more information on the options available to you.

Windows and doors are an expensive upgrade compared to insulation and air sealing and for that reason it is not recommended to start with these upgrades if you have other areas that could use improvements. If you are looking to upgrade windows and doors however the products ENERGY STAR® rating is the best way to determine which are the most efficient. Windows and doors are rated for climate zones within Canada, starting with the warmest zone 1 and progressing to the coldest climate zone 3. When choosing windows and doors looking for the higher climate zone rated products to maximize energy saving.
