

Facts about Care Home Costs – 2019

Residents of Prince Edward Island, who qualify for long term care, only have to pay the accommodation (room and board) costs associated with living in a private care home or a public manor. Further, residents only have to contribute their annual net income (as determined by line 236 on their Canada Revenue Agency Notice of Income Assessment) towards their accommodation costs. If their income does not cover all accommodation charges, they qualify for a Long Term Care Subsidy. This government subsidy will pay the remaining accommodation costs on the resident's behalf. Residents do not have to use their assets to cover the cost of living in a nursing home. Assets include, but are not limited to, family home, money in a bank account, real estate and investments.

“Accommodation Costs/Services” as defined for the Program is the package of services provided by manors and private nursing homes for which there is no additional charge to the resident. Accommodation rates as of October 1st are $92.19 per day in public manors and for subsidized residents in private care homes. Private care home rates can also depend on the type of accommodation requested and ability to pay. It is the responsibility of the resident to select and pay the care home for their accommodations. The following list, although not necessarily exhaustive, more specifically describes the package of services:

Where medically necessary, should foot care be required more frequent than every 4 to 6 weeks, the facility may apply for coverage as an Exceptional Health Care Need/Cost to the Department of Health.
